The Drive to “Delegitimize” Setting the record straight

OK, the Electoral College has voted. But it ain't over 'til its over for the NeverTrumpsters. And it will never be over for them. Whining, worrying and woe-is-me talk are too much fun, and are a great way for malcontents to bond with fellow malcontents. Misery loves miserable company.

But how can you say such a thing? Contesting an election is just part of the messy system we erroneously call democracy. Well, let's take a look at what has already happened:

Green Party candidate Jill Stein called for a recount in three states, yet in each of those states she never polled over 1.2 percent of the vote. So Dr. Stein is really not the aggrieved party. Jill received more media attention and raised more money during the recount farce than she did during the actual campaign. Go figure

The Clinton campaign briefly came to life and sent representatives to “monitor” the recount -- this after she had already conceded the election. Federal Judge Paul Diamond said of the Pennsylvania recount that suspicions the Quaker State's vote had been hacked "borders on the irrational." Maybe the Honorable Judge Diamond is related to the widely respected advice columnist Lou Diamond, because his assessment of the situation makes perfect sense.

The Michigan recount revealed widespread voter fraud in -- surprise, surprise -- Detroit, where quite a few precincts recorded more votes cast than voters registered. We all know how those urban political machines feel about Mr. Trump! Did the Russkies invade Motown? Was the surplus of inner city Clinton votes the result of an 'overhack'?

In the Wisconsin recount, Trump picked up all of 131 votes

But sore losers won't allow a mere recount to deter them. Clinton campaign Chairman John Podesta shouted out for the CIA to brief the 538 Presidential Electors about possible espionage. It's the Russians, stupid -- they hacked the election, you see. Methinks if there was actually some hard evidence of that, the networks and the New York Times would be all over it. Instead, insults, innuendo and insinuation are employed to cast suspicion on the Russians. Vladimir Putin must be chuckling to know how much clout he has in American politics

The NYT also trotted out a professor to lecture us about how the Founding Fathers intended for electors to be free agents and “vote their conscience.” This is the first time I have known the NYT to take inspiration from those dead White males who founded our country -- not bad for an ultra-PC bunch that looks upon the Constitution as a living, breathing document to be mangled at will to justify the leftist PC (oops, I mean “progressive”) agenda.

And a previously unknown group called Electors Choice has emerged to offer free legal advice to faithless electors that have the “courage” to show they are more enlightened than the voters who elected them by voting against the preference of those voters. This is just another way of going back on your word.

Then there is the self-promoting faithless elector from Texas who was awarded fifteen minutes of fame in the NYT to vent and assert his self-proclaimed superiority. I would not be happy if someone elected to represent me broke their word. But then again, that happens all the time, which is part of the reason Mr. Trump was elected in the first place.

Did I mention the numerous death threats, angry calls and emails to the electors?

Well, the recounts and the Electoral College vote are done. But wait: The votes of the Electoral College must be certified by both houses of Congress. This is scheduled to take place, by law, beginning at 1:00 PM on January 6, 2017.

This is usually a routine procedure. But the NeverTrumpsters can put on a good show if they want. Vice President Joe Biden is also president of the Senate. And when he announces the Electoral College vote result, he is legally obligated to call for objections right then and there.

The objection of just one member of the Senate and one of the House can force a vote in each chamber on the results. Both houses have to agree to disqualify any elector. And each Senator or Representative is allotted five minutes to prattle on about this.

Now all this will not change anything, as both houses of Congress have GOP majorities. But it will be a golden opportunity for NeverTrumpsters to vent yet again. We have the best Congress money can buy, and I guess they need to earn their keep.

The globalist hate campaign against Mr. Trump is as vicious as it gets. In more civil times, people accepted election results and moved on. And no matter who is elected, they deserve the opportunity to assume office without suffering a savage, sensational, sore loser effort to “delegitimize” them. But this is exactly what the NeverTrumpsters are chomping at the bit to do, using their discredited mainstream media mouthpieces. They have been licking their chops since Watergate

It ain't gonna be pretty. Stay tuned.
